7 Thus States may create international law and international institutions, and may enforce the rules they codify. However, it is not the rules themselves that determine why a State acts a particular way, but instead the underlying material interests and power relations. International law is thus a symptom of State behaviour, not a cause.

The rise of the "new economic geography" and the increasing use of gravity-type relationships for empirical trade analysis (e.g. Deardorff 199x and Eaton and Kortum 2001) have put space and distance into the mainstream of international economics. Yet we still tend, much more often than not, to model countries as dimensionless points.
