In the Gay Nineties, no place so fully embodied the outrageous lawlessness of turn-of-the-century America as New York City - until a thirty-seven-year-old political reformer named Theodore Roosevelt emerged as president of the New York City Police Commission.

Commissioner Roosevelt: The Story of Theodore Roosevelt

President Theodore Roosevelt, like many other readers, was nauseated by Sinclair's account. The president invited the author to visit him at the White House, where Roosevelt promised that "the special evils you point out shall, if their existence be proved, and if I have the power, be eradicated." A Rough-Riding President
